Notwithstanding the fears which were entertained by many thoughtful men, that Japan, in her recent adoption of foreign customs and civilization, was moving too rapidly, affairs in that country appear to progress satisfactorily. Widely as Western civilization differs from that which exists in in a way which augurs the best things for the point which she has attained. In this variably that she has fallen back from the improvement which she adopted from time and soul together, and wishes to leave the deto time. The instructions which the Jesuits in old days gave to the mandarins at Pekin. in regard to the principles of astronomy, have not been sufficient to prevent Chinese at the present day, whenever an eclipse occurs, from . So far as China has adopted Western ideas, she has always endeavoured to assimilate the civilization of the West to her own, and, in doing so, has succeeded in to Court. altering very little, her old and defective régime. Japan, on the contrary, takes to herself portions of a more advanced civilization | him, who stayed outside the shop, in their integrity, and has succeeded, even while doing so, in preserving the peculiar features of her own nationality. In China, foreign progress is only Chinese in a foreign

. It is worthy of remembrance by those who speculate upon the present change in Japan that the movement is only a repetition of one which took place centuries ago, when Japan, in a lower state of alvancement than adopting that of Western nations. The literature and the sciencesuch as it was-of the Chinese, were in. geniously adapted to the wants of the country; he was going to take the complainant to Macso to relieve the pain. which, however, happily steered clear of some to sell him, and sent him to nine months' hard of those shortcomings in the Chinese system, which have kept the nation for so many centuries almost at a stand-still. In the same manner, we find Japan in the present day, while willing to adopt the systems of Western nations, most careful to do so only so far as they are in accordance with the wants and capabilities of the nation. She proceeds in an eminually practical spirit; casts aside theory and prejudice; investigates every He produced a bill of exchange at 60 per cent. subject, from railways to the Christian Re- interest, in favour of Chun-u-wee, on the Suiligion, to the bottom, and adopts each only so far as the finds it is possible to do so with a due regard to the existing state of public feeling and public requirements.

In this manner, Japan has been able to sift the chaf from the wheat; to retain what is clearly advantageous, rejecting what is of doubtful utility. She has gone, in fact, upon the good principle that no system is perfect. but that every system has in it some elements of good. Thus, while advancing at successive | had been in his employ for three years, and periods a stage in the great march of civilization, she is able to make use of the yery civilizations which she adopts to steer clear of some of the errors into which the nations have fallen from whom she takes them. Thus it happens that while Japan is able to retain the elements of progress which she from time to time adopts, China, in the course of years, falls back to her original principles, from which she has only departed in form. The carefulness with which the Japanese act in regard to their progress is the best guarantee for its continuance. Superficially looked at, the movement which has of late occurred appears to be a feverish rushing after new modes of life and new principles of government; but it will be seen, upon a more careful investigation of the subject, that the empressement of the Japanese consists merely of an anxiety to investigate new systems of civilization, and that they will adopt from these systems only such portions as appear, after careful consideration. to be really suited for the requirements of the

THE BESSEMER SALOON STEAMSHI

An influential deputation from the Bessemen Saloon Steamship Company visited Hull for the purpose of inspecting the progress made by Earle's Shipbuilding and Engineering Compassenger service between Dover and Calais. The deputation consisted of Lord Henry wick, O.B., Mr. Bessemer, Captain Davies, and Mr. Eli Lees, who were received at the works of Earlo's Company by Mr. E. J. Reed, C.B. (the chairman), and by other directors of the company. After examining the detailed drawings of the ship and engines, the factory was visited, and various large castings which are of the engines were inspected. The deputation then proceeded to the shipyard, and, after cursorily viewing the ironclads and large Transatlantic passenger-steamers that somebudy; it must be kept in its place by some are building there, mades very close inspection anthority. Are we to understand that it really Bessener steamer is 350ft. long, 40ft. broad inside of her paddle-boxes, and of 2,774 tons burden, B. M. She will be driven by two sets of paddle-wheel engines, acting upon a double set of paddle-wheels situated 100ft, apart, the aggregate power of the engines being no less than 4,600 I. H. P. Although this ship was ordered less than five months ago, the progress above indicated has already been made, and it is now obvious from an inspection of the ressel even in her present condition, that she will be one of the most remarkable examples of novelty in steam navigation that the world has ever seen. Not only are the two ends of the ship alike, and furnished with rudders, but baving for some 30ft. or 40ft. from the extremities a low freeboard, they at present give the vessel the appearance of a gigantic steam cano. This aspect will, no doubt, disappear as progress is made with the central portion of the ship, and as the paddle boxes are erected; but in her finished condition the vessel will present an unexampled appearance at the extremities. The draught of water of the ship being very light (74ft. only) it is obvious that the rudders will in rough weather be subject to very severe blows and strains, because not only will they be situated near the surface, but they will be necessarily of abnormal length in a fore and aft direction. In view of this fact, Mr. Reed, who designed the ship, has made them of a very massive character, and will furnish them with steering appli-tion of the country, who could give us ances of the most powerful description. The propiling ongines, the power of which has already been stated, are being constructed with the greatest regard to modern improvements in the marine engine, and it is anticipated will drive the vessel at a speed exceeding 20 miles

It will be in the centre of the ship, however that its most characteristic feature will be found, for here will be placed her saloon, which will be 70ft, wide, and suspended upon massive pivots at the centre and at the extremities, thing like a civil or a police force F" The Thus supported, it will be brought under the control of powerful hydraulic gear, worked by the principal boilers of the ship. This gear will be so arranged that it is expected a man will be able to import to the saloon a rolling motion in relation to the ship precisely the reverse of that which the ship herself receives. In other words, the efforts of the ship, when moved by the waves, to impart its own rolling Queen's-road East, called the Wong- beyond description, and free from prejudices, of an old blood-letting. Altogether we dare say they represent what a hundred years ago would have been regarded as a valuable accession to our Colonial Empire. They are actually in-150,000 or 200,000, among whom are some 2,0 10 whites of various nationalities, the remainder being the aboriginal natives of the country. Two years ago a memorial was forwarded to the British Government praying for its protection, and signed by the King, the principal chiefs, and the white residents, Mr. Gladstone, however, maintained that there must be, on the part of the people at large, a desire for our intervention clearly expressed and satis. factorily authenticated before the proposal could be practically entertained. This condition Alderman M'Arthur, who brought the subject before the House, now holds to have been fulfilled, inasmuch as a new memorial, to the same effect, numerously signed by British subjects and others resident in Fiji, is on its way to this country, and was actually expected by the lastmail. However, as it has not yet arrived, Mr. Gladstone had no difficulty in disposing for the present of the weight it might be found to carry, and the question of the popular will must still remain in doubt. But there is another consideration of no slight importance. We are asked, it appears, to supersede an existing to compose the cylinders and other parts Government, described by Mr. M'Arthur as powerless and ineffective, not to say worse, and only partially defended by Mr. Gladstone. But this Government must represent something or tinction? If the majority of the white population, as well as of the natives, desire some better administration, why do they not establish it for themselves? If it requires force to do so, are we to find and employs the means of

Mr. Gladetone expatiated in his usual exhaustive manner on all the possible arguments in favour of the proposal, and, as he rejected them all in succession, it might appear hard to say on what grounds he still thought the question debatable. It had, as he remarked, its terriorial, commercial, economical, and financial aspects. Territory, he proceeded to observe, we could not be said to want, having, in fact, rather more already than we can conveniently manage. In Commerce, Free Trade had raised us to such a height that we had very little need of additional guarantees. As to Finance-that is to say, the probable cost of the proposed charge-Mr. Gladstone briefly remarked that he knew of no instance where an expenditure of £7.000 a year, which was Mr. M'Arthor's estimate, sufficed for the government of 140,000 people. These points being thus disposed of, the Prime Minister proceeded to others. As we have intimated above, the question as to the rights of the existing Government, and its views on this matter, must needs be perplexing. and Mr. Gladstone discerned the dilemma clearly enough. If this Government possessed any fair amount of capacity and authority, why overturn it? If it had neither of these characteristics, of what value was the expression of its opinions? Then, as to the many questions likely to arise in the practical administranature of land tenures prevailing? Ignorance and wint of timely information on this point bad cost us in New Zealand £10,000,000 for military expenditure, besides losses of other kinds beyond all calculation. What, again, were to be the relations established between a large population of blacks and a very small population of whites? "Would a military force be necessary, or could the natives themselves preserve the peace of the island by somereader will probably imagine by this time that Mr. Gladstone had shown cause enough for rejecting the proposed scheme altogether, and yet that was by no means his conclusion. On the contrary, whereas he had on a former occasion distinctly left the question open, he now said that the Government had secured the services of two competent officers, who would forthwith ascertain the actual The truth is there is something more to be said. It is alleged that by abstaining from the proposed intervention we are virtually making correlves participators in the very traffic we have undertaken to suppress. The 2,000 white people of Fiji include many Englishmen, and among these people there are many slavedealers. We had better give the moral in the Premier's own words. "I desire to say," he observed, "that both I and my colleagues feel very strongly the importance of this country taking all proper and reasonable steps in order to put an end to a state of things in which territorial jurisdiction of the Home or Colonial Governments, plant themselves in a region of the earth having little or no political relation avowedly or virtuelly a traffic in human flesh, with its usual accompaniments of moral degradation and physical crucity." This is the consideration which has prevailed with the Ministry and induced them to keep the question still open. This is the particular part of Alderman M'Arthur's argument Mr. Gladstone could not successfully meet. IF I SHOULD DIE TO-NIGHT. If I should die to night, My friends would look upon my quiet face Before they laid it in its reating place, And deem that death had left it almost fair; And laying enow-white flowers against my hair. Would smooth it down with tearful tenderness, And fold my hands with lingering caresa. Poor hands, so empty and so cold to night! If I should die to-night,

My friends would call to mind, with loving Some kindly deed the icy hand had wrought; Some gentle word the frezen lips had said Errands on which the willing feet had sped ; The incincry of my selfishness and pride, My hasty words, would all be put aide. And so I should be leved and mourned to-night.

If I should disto night, a Even hearts estranged would turn once mora Recalling other days remorsefully. . The eyes that chill me with averted glance-Would look upon meas of yore, perchance,

And soften, in the old familiar way. For who could war with dumb, uncorsoious clay? So I might rest, forgiven of all, to-night. Oh, friends, I pray to-night, Keep not your kisses for my dead, sold brow. The way is lonely, let me feel them now. Think gently of me : I am travel-worn : My faltering feet are theread with many a thorn.

Forgive, oh, hearts estranged, forgive, I plead!

Parents, remember 1, and do watched, and sure enough at the end of a be could and then made a dash for a window not fear to give it if your dear ones are couple of years I spotted himagain. I found at the end of the alley. The pot just skimout that he had only been back a week when | med my ear, and then I was on to him like a Leaught sight of him, and so I didn't try to panther, and dragged him back just as he flutter the nest too soon. Het three months had got about half out of the window. I go by, so that he might think he was all downed him, and all but mastered him, when I must not omit one act of kindness on the right, and then I went in to score my next one of the gang, that had popped out as soon as my back was from the door, came running by every man in the Lazareth with almost as I reported him, and half a dozen of us back to tell the others that it was all gam-"my rounds," I noticed that one of the men, and I took my stand at the back, the way be said, they made a rush towards me; and, for I felt that I was face to face with death. It was a low built house, and before those I knew that they'd stick at nothing, and that married only about a year when war was de- word or move an inch, he had whipped out wards, and about as cool and bold a card &
